About the Park

Holt Park is comprised of thirteen acres of meadow, woodland, and lawn, with landmarks such as a lily pond, garden, campfire ring, outdoor amphitheater, historic cabins, and walking trail. The Holt Center offers educational nature and art programs for the public which are affordable or free.

Holt’s History

What is now a public park was originally the McCormick family farm. In the 1930s, the country was in the grips of the Great Depression and Lillian, then in her 40s, was unmarried. Her father worried for her future and from this concern grew a plan: he and others built six rustic cabins on the property, three to be rented for income and one for Lillian, which she later called “The Marchlotte House.”

From the time that the McCormick family moved there, Lillian’s parents Tom and Hattie ensured that the land was shared with the community. Tom led religious study in the woods and built the amphitheater for children’s services. Lillian earned a degree in religious education and, in 1925, a preacher’s license, which was very uncommon for a woman of her time.

Lillian married Methodist minister John E. Holt in 1945, and they enjoyed nineteen years of marriage before his death in 1964. She often painted from her porch, and it is in the memory of her love of the arts, including storytelling, that our art programs have been developed.

When Lillian McCormick Holt died in 1976, she left her land to Baltimore County with the wish that it remain “tranquil in nature.” Since then, it has been host to live music and public events, used as studio and gallery space by local artists, and been a home to the continuation of Lillian’s legacy of sharing arts and education with the community.

Holt Park is located near Kenwood Avenue.
